Executive Summary Background The National Highway Traffic Safety Administrations (NHTSA) mission is to save lives, prevent injuries, and reduce traffic-related healthcare and other economic costs. While much focus has been placed in recent years on alcohol-related driving and speeding, less focus has been paid to other forms of potentially unsafe driving behaviors that draw drivers attention away from the primary task of driving such as distracted and drowsy driving. However, a recent surge in legislation meant to curb cell phone use while driving has increased interest in these and other forms of potentially distracting activities for drivers. NHTSA undertook this nationally representative survey of drivers in order to collect data on the nature and scope of the distracted driving problem with the intent of understanding how serious the problem is in the publics eyes, and what countermeasures the public may accept to control distracted driving. Telephone interviews were conducted with a nationally representative sample of 4, 010 drivers (age 16 or older) in the United States between February 4 and April 14, 2002. The data presented in this document are based on the self-reported responses from these surveyed drivers. Key Findings Engaging in Potentially Distracting Behaviors While Driving We considered 12 potentially distracting behaviors in this study and asked drivers how often they personally engaged in each behavior while driving. The vast majority of drivers engage in two of the behaviors on at least some driving trips, including: Talking with other passengers (81) Changing radio stations or looking for CDs or tapes (66) Nearly half (49) eat or drink while driving at least some of the time, while the...
