Some general rules for finding the superficial content if round or square figures., 5v For round pillars, multiply the length by the circumserence., r. . For square pillars, add the fides or breadths together, and multiply the total by the length. For cones, multiply half the length by the largest circumserence. For pyramids, add all the breadths at the base together, and multiply hdf the length by the total. V - For globes, multiply the area of the greatest circle by 4, it gives the content. MENSURATION Of SOLIDS, HpEacheth how to measure and give up the content of all solid bodies, which are such as do confist of length, breadth, thickness, c. Problem 1. To find the solidity os any Cube, Prism, or Cylinder. A prism, 8cc. is a solid body constituted; of an infinite series of equal areas, that of its base being one of the terms, and its height the number of all the terms; hence therefore may be deducted the following rule. Multiply the area of the base by the depth or perpendicular altitude, and the product shitt be the solid content. Note. In the following examples, the solid figures are formed more to answer the. purpose they are defign d for, than for perspectives; as also there is this advantage, that the lea/ner may very eafily form an idea to nuke others by them. Example of a Cube. Feet. Solid content 6.859 Admit the following a square Prism, vjz, more...
